on one occasion in order to demand a refund. A third individual also possibly accompanied them. They possibly arrived in a compact sedan which resembled a Toyota Camry. This meeting took place a few days after Al Mihdhar had signed the lease agreement [redacted]. Al Mihdhar told [redacted] that he was not going to move because Al Attas' apartment was too messy. [redacted] however, refused to refund his rental deposit of $650 as [redacted] felt that Al Mihdhar had simply taken the items and furnishing from Al Attas' apartment and then trashed the place. Moreover, [redacted] essentially felt as though Al Attas and Al Mihdhar had tried to pull a scam on him wherein Al Attas would be allowed to vacate with no penalty despite having not provided the required notice of his intent to vacate.

Al Mihdhar always acted "real weird." On this particular occasion, however, he became very angry when [redacted] refused to refund his money. In particular, he started yelling at [redacted] and he acted like a "dick." He had a short fuse. Al Mihdhar was "ranting and raving" and he acted like he was "psychotic." [redacted] explained to Al Mihdhar that he had signed a contract and that he was not entitled to a refund. Al Hazmi did the talking for Al Mihdhar.
